Bonds were yet another source of positive returns, led by short positions in the German 30-year Buxl and 30-year U.S. Treasuries, long Japanese Government Bonds and active trading U.K. 10-year Gilts. Currencies also provided important gains, primarily from short positions in the Japanese Yen, Swiss Franc and Canadian Dollar against the U.S. Dollar. Energies generated losses led by short Brent crude and diesel, and long WTI crude. Active trading gasoline and natural gas, and short carbon emissions produced meaningful gains, reducing losses. Grains generated losses led by active trading bean oil and longs in wheat and soy meal, with important offsetting gains from active trading milling wheat. Indices were the best performers, led by long positions in Japanese Topix, Hang Seng, Spanish IBEX, Canadian TSX60 and Italian MIB, as well as active trading in the French CAC40. Metals produced gains led by long gold, partially offset by short copper. Softs generated meaningful profits stemming largely from long coffee. Active trading cotton, and long sugar and cocoa also contributed. Volatility experienced losses mostly concentrated in August, when a steep market sell-off led to a long (and initially profitable) exposure to the VIX, which later turned into a loss as markets quickly recovered.
